WK&T Expands Broadband Reach with Acquisition of Southern Alabama Provider

Mayfield, KY — West Kentucky & Tennessee Telecommunications Cooperative (WK&T) is proud to announce its agreement to acquire Hayneville Telephone Company (HTC) and Camellia Communications, both third-generation, family-owned broadband providers serving Butler and Lowndes Counties in southern Alabama. This strategic acquisition marks a major milestone in WK&T's ongoing mission to expand its fiber network and deliver cutting-edge technology and exceptional customer service to more locations in rural America.

Founded in 1946, HTC has built a legacy of personalized service and strong community connections. WK&T is committed to honoring that legacy by continuing HTC's efforts to expand fiber access, upgrade infrastructure, and nurture the trusted relationships that have defined their success.

"This acquisition isn't just about growth—it's about stewardship," said Karen Jackson-Furman, CEO of WK&T. "Hayneville's values mirror our own: service, reliability, and community-first thinking. WK&T also owns Ardmore Telephone Company in Ardmore, Alabama, so we're not new to the state. We've built deep relationships with other Alabama telecommunications providers and are excited to bring our operational expertise and customer-focused approach to serve more families and businesses in the Camellia State."

"WK&T's reputation for innovation and integrity made this an easy decision," said Evelyn Causey, COO of Hayneville Telephone Company. "We know our customers will be in good hands, and we're thrilled to see our vision carried forward with the same commitment and enthusiasm. I will remain with HTC for the foreseeable future to ensure a smooth transition and to personally introduce WK&T to the communities we serve."

This acquisition extends WK&T's footprint further into Alabama, reinforcing its role as a regional leader in rural broadband. It supports WK&T's long-term strategy to deliver future-proof connectivity across state lines while preserving the heart of local service.
